

Words IVAN SMITH ■
Photos DAVID ROGERS/Getty Images ■

How to bluff your way to stardom

□ IF YOU think a tighthead is what you get from drinking too much beer, or if talk of halves and five-eighths has you reaching for a calculator, then brush up your Rugby knowledge with this handy guide to the game they play in heaven

Breeze your way through any RWC 2003 "situation" by casually referring to these famous incidents.

✓✓ 1995 Rugby World Cup semi-final New Zealand 45 England 29

Sounds like a reasonable result to me.

Yes, but a bloke called Jonah Lomu scored four.

Oh, yeah, right.

Lomu announced himself on the world stage by trampling all over England's nice young men.

England wing Tony Underwood didn't help matters by winking at Lomu during the Haka, and was later smashed practically into the crowd during one of Lomu's runs.

Couldn't they stop the man?

Could you? Strapping fullback Mike Catt was memorably stamped over as Jonah barrelled towards the line. Afterwards England captain Will Carling moaned, "He's a freak and the sooner he goes away the better."

✓✓ 1999 Rugby World Cup semi-final France 41 New Zealand 33

Good side are they, France?

It was one of those days when French bodies and minds turned up together and on time. At half-time, seven points down, and playing a Kiwi side such hot favourites the bookies laughed in your face, it seemed all over. Instead, French forwards had a massive second 40, allowing the backs to