

Boys' toys

RECORD TIME

SLIM as a snowball's chance of making a new life for itself in the underworld, the digital voice-recorder from Oregon Scientific does away with all that cassette nonsense. Instead, here are 200 minutes of audio recordability, with a useful indexing facility to make it really easy to find your memo telling you to put out that pesky house fire. $159, call Gowings on 1800 803 304

PRINTS CHARMING

THE printer RALPH used to help rate the cameras for September's digicam feature, Canon's S800 Bubble Jet is a little treasure of portability, speed and resolution. With photo-print capabilities, optical colour scanning and a righteous definition of 2400 x 1200dpi, the only thing that won't make your eyes come out like a cartoon man's is the price. Nice one, Canon blokes. $649, call Canon on 1800 021 167

DIGITAL DRESS

WE'VE been doing it all wrong: music isn't something you listen to, it's something you put on, like a big floppy hat. Panasonic wants you to strap its tiny SV-SD75 digital-audio player to your wrist or hang it around your neck and call it a lifestyle accessory. Once you've got over that excitement, why not stick in a 64-meg memory card and listen to it? $1049, call Panasonic on 13 26 00

BURN IT UP

FINALLY, a micro-system you won't need to hide upstairs like an idiot child. The unusual looks of Kenwood's HM 982RW will have important guests cooing and stroking it, and the double CD deck and rewritability from radio, cassette [it happens] and CD will give hours of micro-mixing fun. $1499, call Kenwood on 1800 251 697

Photos > Richard Mortimer