What happened at the last beach party you went to?

[Silence] Ohh...

How long ago was it?

About a year ago.

And you did things you're ashamed of now, didn't you?

Yes, but it's probably best left unsaid.

What bit are you most ashamed of?

Oh, I'm not ashamed, but it's...

[laughter]. Oh, you little shit!

Easy now. Was it fun?

Yes, it was.

Did you wake up in the morning and go, "Oh, no!" or, "Oh, yes!"?

"Oh, yeah!"

Sex on the beach – is it worth the bother?

You mean all the sand and seaweed?

I suppose so.

Yeah, if it's with the right guy, for sure.

It's a bit of fun.

Do you think the ad should have given a warning about the dangers of swimming while intoxicated?

Well, there was no implication anyone was drinking.

That's true. People can have a good time without alcohol.

That's right, they can.

Can you?

Yeah, of course. I don't know what activity I'm doing, but of course.

"I ACTUALLY LIKE ROCK MUSIC... I FIND IT SEXY"

How would you like to go to a party with no alcohol?

Mmm, it's not really my idea of a good night.

There seems to be an element of sexuality in the ad, which I'm concerned about.

[Laughs] It's really worrying you, is it?

It is a bit.

Yeah, it's a bit naughty. It's just saying that these are people who enjoy a young lifestyle.

What's a bad choice of party music?

Maybe an '80s remix CD. That would be pretty bad.

And the best seduction music?

I actually like rock music. I find it sexy.

A bit of Acca Dacca before bedtime?

Or even Aerosmith. And Lenny Kravitz.

What's the worst thing a guy can put on?

Barry Manilow. Actually, no: the worst thing he could put on would be Cher.

Cher? You don't think "Believe" is one of the great tracks?

[Laughs] Uh, no. Oh God, I've just spilt water on my lap.

That's the excitement created by Barry Manilow.
